Lance R. Lewis is the Chief Operating Officer (COO) of the California Medical Association (CMA), a non-profit organization representing more than 44,000 physicians in all modes of practice and specialties dedicated to promoting the science and art of medicine, the protection of public health and the betterment of the medical profession.

Mr. Lewis is responsible for the executive management, administrative and operational support centers of the organization, including the departments of Governance, Finance and Administration, Human Resources, Information Technology and Facilities Management.

During his tenure as COO, Mr. Lewis transformed the budgeting process from a traditional accounting method to an activity-based costing model, orchestrated the sale of a subsidiary creating a perpetual endowment and devised a new integrated Association Management System connecting CMA to its 42 component medical organizations and related subsidiaries to exchange data in real-time. Mr. Lewis also played a key role in transforming CMA's 158-year-old corporate governance mechanism, ushering in a new era of proactive, rather than reactive, decision-making.

Mr. Lewis maintains a relentless focus on the cultural interaction between individuals and teams across the entire company by emphasizing the need for teamwork. He does this by persuading others to see themselves as integral to achieving the company's goals and by creating enthusiasm for tackling obstacles to success through cooperation, mutual reliance and accountability.

Mr. Lewis is a member of the Board of Directors for CalHIPSO, a non-profit organization dedicated to helping clinicians successfully transition to electronic health record systems and attain Meaningful Use. In addition, he serves as Chief Financial Officer for several other non-profit organizations including Physicians for a Healthy California and the California Public Protection & Physician Health organization.

In 2016, Mr. Lewis helped launch PSO Services, LLC, a national health care solutions company that offers products and services to help independent physicians transition to value-based care and other alternative payment models. He is the company's first CEO.

Mr. Lewis was named CFO of the Year by the Sacramento Business Journal in 2017.

Mr. Lewis earned his Bachelor of Arts in Political Science from UC Santa Barbara and his Master’s in Business Administration (MBA) from the University of Southern California’s Marshall School of Business. He lives in Sacramento with his wife Shanda and their children, Braden and Emma.
